HOFFMAN CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

The celebration of the Hoffman Centennial was held on Wednesday, June 20th, 1923, at the old Hoffman homestead, and now the modern residence of Mr. Amos Hoffman. The spacious lawn which were decorated with bunting, flags, evergreens and Japanese lanterns, presented a picturesque scene, which was supported the slogan, "Lest we forget," which was suspended from the vine-clad porch.

This most unique occasion was organized by an enthusiastic and capable committee, with Mr. and Mrs. Amos Hoffman ably acting as convenors. The purpose of this historic event was to commemorate the lives of two distinguished United Empire Loyalists who were the first pioneers to penetrate north of the Bay of Quinte.

There were present a large concourse of descendants of these two worthy pioneers, namely Jacob and Elijah Hoffman. In the forenoon the relatives gathered at Moscow cemetery, where Rev. J. W. Down conducted an appropriate memorial service, while tributes of flowers and flags were placed on the graves of the beloved predecessors, Jacob and Elijah Hoffman.

On arriving at the residence the relatives were given a hearty welcome by the chairman of the Reception Committee, Mrs. G. W. Lampkin, and after signing Yes-Olde-Time Hoffman Register, the guests listened with intense interest to the prominent speaker, W. S. Herrington, K.C., Napanee. Mr. Herrington outlined the geneology of the Hoffman progenitors, from the reign of Queen Anne, in 1709, through the period covering the migration of the United Empire Loyalists to the wooded shores of the Bay of Quinte. The speaker especially mentioned the fact that this was the first family centennial which, to his knowledge, had been celebrated, and that the descendants were maintaining their self-respect, pride and good citizenship, by commemorating the lives of such highly principled nation builders, namely Jacob and Elijah Hoffman. These resourceful and sturdy settlers in blazing a trail under adverse conditions, and hewing from a dense forest a clearing for a home, made the humble beginnings of this Royalist Settlement at Moscow, Ont. A pride of race and principles determined them to "cut out a location for themselves where they would be privileged to enjoy British freedom, and where they would not be in jeopardy of losing their traditional sentiments and identity through being absorbed in an overwhelming mass of revolutionists in United States.

Strengthened by their dsire for loyalty and ambition to progress they were content to be pilgrims, living in the bare necessities of existence, in a strange and sparsely settled country, at the expense of extreme toil and hardship. Fortunately, small things did not discourage them and the persevering characteristics have ever since ben the distinguishing marks of the descendants of the Hoffman family.

Reference was made by the chairman, Rev. Archibald Hoffman, to the recently illustrated volume, contributed by the late Emily Hoffman-Bogart. It was the purpose of the authoress in compiling this informational edition, dedicated to the Hoffman generation, to further cement the family loyalty and unanimity, and newer interest in the traditions of the respective forefathers, by having a centennial Hoffman reunion. The chairman paid tribute to the noble Christian character of the late Mrs. Marshall Bogart and expressed the feeling of the relatives in not having the honor and privilege of her personality present, to complete this memorial event. The chairman read telegrams from relatives from all parts of Canada and United States, extending their hearty wishes for this historic occasion.

Rev. Hoffman introduced the guest of honor, Mrs. Emily Hoffman-Van Luven, the eldest surviving member of this interesting lineage of Hoffman descendants. While Mrs. VanLuven received the congratulations from the entire assembly of relatives, she was presented with a beautiful bouquet of American Beauty Roses, and the guests joined in singing "Blest be the Tie that Binds Our Hearts in Christain Love."

At the conclusion of the morning exercises over two hundred guests sat down to the bountiful banquet, which was most elaborately served on the lawn in the shade of the stately elm trees during the banquet hour. Shortly after this sumptuous dinner Rev. A. Hoffman conducted baptismal services of the youngest relatives of the Hoffman generation. The children, christened in the sacred rights of the Methodist baptism, were Master Samuel Donald Denison Asselstine, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Isac Asselstine, Napanee, and Mrster Jack Clifton Hoffman, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Ottis Hoffman, Moscow.

Rev. W. R. Spencer, Gananoque, extended congratulations to Hoffman relatives who were the descendants of such examples of noble manhood, which were characteristic of the United Empire Loyalists, and of the Hoffmans in particular. Rev. Spencer stated that the pioneer conditions and the stability of Jacob and Elijah Hoffman were not dissimilar to that of Jacob and Elijah, the Eastern men of old.

Congratulations and reminiscences of past evens were offered by several prominent neighbors, namely Mr. J. Foster, Mr. W. A. Martin and Mr. H. A. Baker. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. W. S. Herrington, K.C., and all the speakers for thir careful consideration to the subject of their remarks, and for so ably presenting the outstanding characteristics of the hardy pioneers.

It was moved by Mr. W. A. Martin, seconded by Mr. H. A. Baker, that the sincere appreciation of all assembled be given to Mr. and Mrs. Amos Hoffman, who so most hospitably granted the use of the Old Homestead for this momentous reunion, and, with their Service Committee, managed to conduct a well organized celebration to a successful conclusion.

A buffet luncheon was followed by an excellent evening program, provided by the members of the Yarker orchestra. This program was enjoyed by all the neighbors and friends who gathered to share the hospitality of the Hoffman family. This event concluded with community singing and fireworks.

The relatives signed the guest register at the desk formerly used by Elijah Hoffman when he served the county as Justice of the Peace, and drew up the wills and deeds of the early settlers. Among those present were Mrs. Emily VanLuven, Kingston, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. Amos Hoffman, and son, Donald Hoffman; Mr. and Mrs. Ottis Hoffman, son William and daughters Georgia and Mary Hoffman Evans, Moscow; Mr. and Mrs. Otis Hoffman and family, Moscow; Mr. Miro Hoffman, Kincardine; Mr. and Mrs. Harris, Ripley, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. Milton Hoffman, Mr. and Mrs. Gilligan, Colebrooke, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. Milo Hoffman, Mr. and Mrs. Garnet Hoffman, and family, Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Hoffman and family, Mr. Henry Hoffman, Mrs. Bella Hoffman-Rombough, Moscow, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. Geo. CONSERVATIVES SWEEP THE PROVINCE

Popular Landslide gives Hon. Howard Ferguson a Good Majority.

PREMIER DRURY AND FIVE CABINET MINISTERS DEFEATED—LIBERAL LEADER DEFEATED.

Hon. George Howard Ferguson, of Kemptville, will be Ontario's next Premier. In yesterday's election the Conservatives virtually swept the Province from the Ottawa River to Windsor, and also obtained a goodly proportion of the membership from New Ontario.

At 2 o'clock this (Tuesday) morning the returns were still incomplete. A terrific electrical storm had played havoc with wires in Western Ontario just when they were needed worst, and many ridings had not reported final returns. However, out of 111 seats the Conservatives were assured of a substantial majority of members elected, no matter what the delayed returns bring forth.

The party standing at that hour was: Conservatives, 77; Liberals, 16; U.F.O. 13; Labor, 3; Independents, 1.

Dr. J. P. Vrooman Elected with a majority of 131.

It had been freely predicted during the past few weeks that Dr. P. Vrooman, the Liberal candidate, would be elected to represent Lennox in the Provincial House and from the first reception of the returns the result was not in doubt.

The returns from Napanee were the first received and Dr. Vrooman received a majority in in every pole, the total majority for Napanee being 289.

The returns from the townships then began to come in and it was soon realized that the majorities received by Mr. Hambly in Richmond, Bath and Ernestown would not be large enough to affect the result.

At present it is impossible to give the total vote, but the majorities by municipalities is as follows:

	Vrooman	Hambly
Amherst Island	...	3
Adolphustown	14	...
Bath	...	40
S. Frederick-burgh	...	31

WEDDING BELLS

PENNY-HUSBAND.

Wednesday evening of last week at the home of 8 o'clock, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Marcus P. Husband, Empey Hill, was the scene of a very pleasant event, when their only daughter, Beatrice Marguerite, was given in marriage to Mr. Clarence Oliver Penny, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Penny, of Empey Hill. The bride entered the drawing room on the arm of her father, to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march, played by Miss Nora Graham, Napane, cousin of the bride, and took her place under an arch of evergreens and orange blossoms, in the centre of which was suspended a large white wedding bell, where the groom awaited her. The wedding ceremony was then conducted by Rev. T. H. P. Anderson, of Selby. The bride looked very sweet in a gown of Harding blue Canton Crepe, with a corsage bouquet of orange-blossoms and ferns. The decorations of the house were carried out in blue and white and was very appropriate for this charming event. A very dainty wedding supper was served and partaken of by the large number of guests present. Beautiful and numerous

HUDSON-WITHERS.

At high noon, on Wednesday of last week, a very pretty event was solemnized at St. John's Church, Selby, when Mrs. Walter Hudson, of Napanee, and Mrs. Frank Hudson, Mt. Pleasant, and Miss Grace Withers, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Withers, Tyendinaga, were united in marriage by Rev. T. Branch. The edifice was tastefully decorated for the occasion and the auditorium was well filled with friends and relatives who witnessed the ceremony. The bride, who looked very charming in a gown if snowflake Madalesent and wearing the customary bridal veil, was given away by her father. Miss Gladys Hudson assisted the bride, and Mr. Russell Withers, brother of the bride, acted as best man for the groom. After the ceremony the bridal party, accompanid by a host of friends, motored to the home of the bride's parents, where a sumptuous wedding dinner was partaken of by over one hundred guests. The wedding presents received by the young couple were very numerous and beautiful, testifying to the high esteem in which they are held by their many friends. After a short wedding tour the young couple intend making their furure home at Mt. Pleasant.

LIVE POULTRY FAIR DAY

The Live Poultry Fair held at Napanee on Tuesday last, while it was not altogether a complete success, because of the fact that outside buyers failed to appear, representatives of several buy the live poultry which was offered for sale, it may be explained, however, that the local branch of the Ontario Department of Agriculture and the Poultry Division of the Live Stock Branch, Ottawa, did everything in their power to have the buyers present. A special letter, together with last particulars of the poultry fair, was mailed to five Toronto firms and six Montreal firms. In addition, poultry buyers in Kingston and Belleville were interviewed personally and advised of the Fair. It was very unfortunate that only $1.00 had been come. However, I would like to explain that it was through no fault of the local office. Apparently the season representatives of the trade were not at the Live Poultry Fair is that the market is very dull at the present time, and the poultry buyers received all the poultry they could handle at their respective places of business, without attending any central outside marketing point. However, the local buyers, Messrs. Marsh and Mills, purchased larger quantities of live birds brought to the market at good fair prices to the producers, and it may be said to their credit that they were personally instrumental in making the Live Poultry Fair a fair success. It is estimated that approximately 2000 live birds were brought to the Fair. Of this number, Mr. Marsh purchased 1000 and Mr. Mills 385. The prices the farmers received for poultry were as follows:

Birds weighing 6 lbs. and over, 20c. per lb.; 5 lbs. and over, 18c. per lb.; 4 lbs. and over, 15c. per lb.; Culls, 10c. to 12c. per lb.

The quality of poultry offered was excellent, and only culls were offered for sale, and the majority of the hens brought around 18c. per lb.

The Federal and Provincial Governments greatly appreciate the support and co-operation of the Napanee Town Council and Board of Trade. These two organizations helped in every possible way in advertising the Live Poultry Fair. The Department takes this oportunity of thanking them for their able assistance, but regrets that the Fair did not materialize as successfully as anticipated.

George Kinnear's appeal to have his assessment lowered on account of barn being destroyed by fire came next.

Moved by W. J. Gollinger, seconded by Milford Dupree, that George Kinnear's assessment in e ½ lot 11, con. 5, be lowered $200.00 on buildings. Carried.

Edward Jordan's appeal to be lowered on land and buildings was then heard.

Moved by S. S. Brown, seconded by Milford Dupree, that Edward Jordan's assessment on lot 1, con. 10, be lowered $100.00. Carried.

Next came the appeal of Albert Davis to have his assessment lowered on c p lot 17, con. 2, and n w pt. lot 18, con. 2, as he considered it too high in proportion to others.

Moved by S. S. Brown, seconded by Milford Dupree, that Edward Jordan's assessment on lot 1, con. 10, be lowered $100.00. Carried.

Next came the appeal of Albert Davis to have his assessment lowered on c p lot 17, con. 2, and n w pt. lot 18, con. 2, as he considered it too high in proportion to others.

Moved by E. A. McQuaig, seconded by W. J. Gollinger, that John Craig, Martha Hudgins and Leonard Hudgins, whose names were omitted from assessment roll, be added in place of A. H. Irwin, on lots 21 and 22, Selby. Carried.

Moved by E. A. McQuaig, seconded by W. J. Gollinger, that A. H. Irwin's name be taken off lots 1 and 2 in the village of Selby and that Alma Wood be assessed for the above lots. Also that the business and dog assessment be taken off. Carried.

Moved by E. A. McQuaig, seconded by W. J. Gollinger, that no action be taken in regard to Wellington Craig's appeal on n pt. lot 17, con. 2. Carried.

Lieurance's Brass Choir at Dominion Chautauqua

Lieurance's Brass Choir, featuring wind musical instruments in their playing, will be one of the distinctly novel and highly pleasing musical attractions of the coming Dominion Chautauqua.

This unique company was organized by Thurlow Lieurance, well-known composer of "By the Waters of Minnetonka," and a prominent figure in the world of music.

A remarkable feature of the Brass Choir's musical offerings is the striking voice tones produced by the instruments. The Choir's programs will afford a wealth of musical enjoyment.

MOSAICS

You've seen them in Italy, of course; old mosaics chipped and broken and crumbling and picturesque, with here and there a group of little squares and hexagons that have withstood the ravages of time and the elements fascinating the traveller all the more because of the decay and imperfection of the broken tesserae about it. "Here's a perfect bit," you say; and you stand wondering at its beauty. Why did it outlast the rest of the mosaic? Better material? Better workmanship? Both perhaps. And your mind goes travelling inquiringly back over the centuries as loses itself in a mazed of vague wondering.

You've looked at mosaics elsewhere, too,—and laughed at some of them, no doubt. There's that odd mosaic of health beliefs, for instance, that is so fascinating. Here is a person who reads all the patent medicine advertisements in the yearly almanac and buys up most of them because he's sure he has all the symptoms they describe; there is a Montevidean lady sitting at home wrapped in an uncomfortable combination of furs and hot water bottles because she thinks artificial heat highly injurious; there again is an Indian medicine man creating an internal noise for the purpose of quieting a delirious patient. From all corners of the world contributions are made to this interesting pattern. Parts of the mosaic have crumbled, others are beginning to show signs of wear; and every now and then a marvellous new piece is added.

Have you noticed that little square that a Canadian city has contributed? Solid as any in the whole pattern, we hope. It is a city that is building the health of its people on the foundation of a vigorous infancy. Only a few years ago its record was a little less than moderately good. In 1919, for instance, it lost 116.7 infants under one year of age out of every thousand babies born. That is to say more than one out of every ten died before completing the twelfth month of life. That city had by 1919 begun to waken up, however, and it did a number of things without delay. Of course it began by forming an association. It also set aside an office for the work of the association. And then it took hold of the infant morality problem. It established a weekly pre-natal clinic where expectant mothers were taught the simple laws of health and personal hygiene, and helped them to develop the habit of conforming to them. It established five Well Baby Clinics to which babies report weekly to be weighed and measured and examined generally, while the mother and the nurse in charge discuss diet and clothing and temperatures and ventilating and other kindred matters. The baby gets every possible chance to be healthy and happy and well-trained. But if the nurse finds that he shows signs of departing from the strait and narrow road that leads to the land of health, off he goes to the Sick Baby Clinic, where he is put under the care of a physician. Last year the fine trained workers in the baby clinics reached one quarter of the children under five years of age in that city, and made 26,237 visits to the homes of children under supervision.

And that city has reason to be proud of its experiment and of the establishment of this new public utility. The education of the citizens thus being promoted has resulted in the infant mortality rate being cut in half within three years. Here are the figures: In 1919 the death rate among infants was 116.7 per 1000 live births; in 1920, 104 per 1000 live births; in 1921, 80.7 per 1000 live births; in 1922, 65.5 per 1000 live births.

That city was London, Ontario. Do you known what contributio your own community is making toward the Canadian section of the world's health mosaic?

Started J. J.

It takes a lot to startle J. J. Morrison, secretary of the United Farmer's organization of Ontario, but he admitted receiving a genuine surprise up in northern Ontario last fall while he was directing the distribution among the fire sufferers of sewing machines purchased by the U.F.O.

Only a limited number of machines were available and Mr. Morrison realized that unless something were done the supply would be exhausted quickly. It was decided that machines were to be given only to married couples who furnished proof that they had four or more children.

Came a smiling French-Canadian settler to Mr. Morrison's headquarters one day applying for a machine. He was still a relatively young man.

"How many children have you?" asked the genial J. J.

"Seventeen," replied the applicant, white teeth flashing.

"Seventeen!" gasped Mr. Morrison. "How big is your house?"

"Oh, 'bout eighteen by twenty-four," jauntily informed him.

"Do all your children live with you?" pursued Mr. Morrison.

"Non, one boy he live on next farm."

"How old is that boy?"

"He is twenty-three years old."

"And you have sixteen other children?" enquired Mr. Morrison incredulously.

"Yeah; got three pair twins, all 'live," replied the settler proudly.

"I told that man he deserved six sewing machines," remarked Mr. Morrison, in relating the incident to a party of friends.

How to Make Raspberry or Blackberry Jam

Crush well about 2 quarts ripe berries in separate portions, so that each berry is thoroughly mashed. This allows fruit to quickly absorb sugar during the short boil. Measure 4 level cups (2 lbs.) into large kettle, add 7 level cups (3 lbs.) sugar and mix well. Use hottest fire and stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard for one full minute, remove from fire and stir in half bottle (scant ½ cup) Certo. From time jam is taken off fire, allow to stand not over 5 minutes, by the clock, before pouring. In the meantime, skim, and stir occasionally to cool slightly. Then pour quickly. If in open glasses, paraffin at once. If in jars, seal at once, and invert for 10 minutes to sterilize the tops.

WILD ANIMALS KNOW FRIEND.

Man Won Confidence of Deer to a Remarkable Extent.

A wonderful wild-animal sanctuary is to be found on Hardy Island, a dot of rocks and trees off the coast of British Columbia, where a veteran prospector has achieved the feat of winning the confidence of wild deer so completely that now they come from long distances to visit him. This remarkable man, T. B. Brazil, has built tables for the deer near his house. Each deer has a separate bowl, and their table manners are exceptionally good. This is the first wild-deer restaurant in the world, writes Francis Dickie in the Christian Herald.

That animals communicate with one another is strikingly shown by the fact that when Mr Brazil first took up his residence on this island, where he is the only human being, he saw only two deer. He put out feed for them, and after a few weeks got their confidence. In the autumn those deer brought five more. The next year there were 30. To-day, six years later, hundreds come to the island. They make it their refuge during the shooting season, knowing they will be protected, and the does here give birth to their young, so that in the early summer the island is alive with little ones.

The deer come and go at will, and the minute they are parted from their protector are absolutely wild deer. It has not been easy work for the man thus to establish himself in perfect trust of the hundreds of deer and it has taken him nearly a decade, but now the deer are coming to him from distant islands and the mainland. It is certainly is an achievement, for it must be borne in mind that all these deer were born in the wild and came to maturity in the fear of man. Most of them will vanish at sight of a stranger.

While the animals are well fed at the open air restaurant, some of them insist on assuming as the house and knocking on the door with head or horns, or rattling the door knob with their teeth, in this way begging for extra food delicacies, such as oatmeal. One great buck came every night in this manner for a period of a year, often forcing the man to get out of bed to feed him.

Face Dangers to Deliver Mail.

In India the distribution of a great deal of mail matter is performed by runners. They are drawn largely from the lowest castes and least civilized races, and many of them are animists by religion. They are ready to face wild beasts and wandering criminals, but will go miles out of their way to avoid an evil spirit in a tree.

With them the mail bag is a kind of fetish, which must be preserved at all costs. Dishonesty among them is very rare, and they are wonderfully true to their "salt," which seldom exceeds $2 a month. Not a year passes that does not take its toll of mail runners who lose their lives in the execution of their duty. It may be a tiger, a swollen river, an avalanche in the Himalayas, a gang of robbers. But the work goes on just the same—the mail must go through, whatever happens.

FORESAW HIS DEATH.

Did D'Arcy McGee Know His End Was Near?

Whether D'Arcy McGee foresaw his own death has been often debated, and at the anniversary of his assassination in 1868, recently, has aroused a renewal of the discussion. Some of his Irish Celtic imagination might well be credited with premonitions, and there is good reason to believe he feared the worst, when he knew the partisans of the Fenians were on his trail. It is recalled by the Woodstock Sentinel-Review, that just a month before his death, he wrote a poem on the death of a friend which is believed to have had some significance. In that poem he said:

Friend of my soul, farewell to thee!
Thy truth, thy trust, thy chivalry;
As thine, so may my last end be!
Miserere, Domine.

Even more convincing evidence is given in Pope's Life of Sir John A. Macdonald, which tells in some detail of the dream which McGee had a day or two before the bullet found its mark. On Sunday, April 5, McGee had dined at the home of James Goodwin in Ottawa. After dinner he lay down on the sofa in the library, but presently started from his sleep, pressed his hands to his head, and said: "I have had a fearful dream." In reply to a question he said: "I dreamed that I stood on the banks of the Niagara, where I saw two young men in a boat being carried down by the current. I shouted to warn them of their danger, whereupon they pulled their oars and rowed up the stream, and I fell over the boiling abyss." In relating this dream he seemed greatly distressed. Early in the morning of the 7th he was shot while returning from a late session of the House.

During his last speech, a few hours before his death, McGee pleaded with the anti-Confederation party of Nova Scotia to accept the Union, and said: "We will compel them to come in and accept this Union. We will compel them by our fairness and kindness, our love, to be one with us in this common and this great national work."

A few days later Sir John Macdonald wrote to a friend: "Poor fellow! He was just at the beginning of his usefulness. He had thoroughly reformed in every way and was giving his genius full play."

HOW TO ATTRACT BIRDS.

Feathered Friends Drawn by Shelter and Food.

Birds appeal strongly to the interests and affections of mankind. Not only do they charm by their graceful forms, harmonious colors, sprightly actions and usually pleasing notes, but they serve an even more important claim upon our esteem because of their great economic value. Birds feed upon practically all insect pests, and are therefore able to move freely from place to place, and exert a steady influence in keeping down the swelling tide of insect life.

"The means of increasing the number of birds about the home are few and simple," says W. L. McAtee in a bulletin of the United States Department of Agriculture on how to attract them. "They comprise adequate protection and the provision of suitable nesting places, food and drink. It is planned in a series of publications to recommend practicable methods of attracting birds about homes in the various parts of the United States. Protection is the prime requisite for increasing the number of birds in any area, and the results of protection are in direct proportion to its thoroughness.

"Although a considerable number of our native birds build their nests on the ground, the majority place them in trees or shrubs, either in holes or on the limbs or in the clotches. Shrubbery and trees furnishing sites, therefore, are essential for making a place attractive to birds, and a double purpose is served if the kinds planted are chosen from the list of fruit-bearing species given further on. Shrubs should be allowed to form thickets and should be pruned back severely when young, so as to produce numerous crotches.

"Constant removal of old trees and modern tree-surgery have resulted in a great diminution in the number of tree cavities, the natural homes of most of our hole-nesting birds. Fortunately, most of these birds will utilize artificial nest cavities, or bird houses.

"As a rule, birds do not like to be crowded, and if a place is studded with bird houses only a few of them will be occupied. Birds not only do not want bird neighbors too near, but are impatient of human meddling and therefore should be granted as much privacy as possible during the actual incubating and brooding.

"Nothing has a more potent attraction for birds during hot weather than drinking and bathing places. The birds' water supply should be a pool not more than a few inches deep, the bottom sloping gradually upward toward the edge. Both bottom and side should be rough, so as to afford a safe footing. A glass pottery saucer is an excellent device, or the pool may be made of concrete, or even metal, if the surface be roughened. The bird bath may be elevated or on the ground if in an open space where skulking enemies cannot approach too near. A water supply is appreciated in winter as well as in summer. If running water cannot be provided, that supplied should be warmed to delay freezing.

"Food supply is a vital factor in bird life and the most important single offering that can be made in efforts to attract birds. It is important to note that an ample supply of food prior to and during the nesting season tends to increase the number of eggs laid and also the number of broods in a season. Bird food may be supplied in two ways—by planting trees, shrubs and herbs which produce seeds relished by birds, and by exposing food in artificial devices. The most familiar phase of the latter method is winter feeding.

"During the season when the natural food supply is at its lowest ebb, birds respond most readily to our hospitality. Winter feeding has become very popular, and the results have been to bring about better understanding between birds and humankind. The better foods commonly used include suet or fat scraps from kidneys, bones with shreds of meat, meal worms, cut-up apples, birdseed, buckworms, crackers, crumbs, cocoanut meat, cracked corn, broken dog biscuits or other bread, hemp seed, millet, nut meats of all kinds, (especially peanuts), whole or rolled oats, peppers, popcorn, pumpkin or squash seeds, ray of boiled rice, sunflower seeds and wheat."

Dog Finds Family Riches.

A dog, clawing frantically in a tower near an old homestead at Courtland, Ala., uncovered a priceless treasure chest filled with gold and silver coins and plate of the Saunders family, one of the most prominent families in the south "before the war." Miss Josephine Saunders, of Memphis, Tenn., is heiress to the fortune, which for years has been considered a myth.

According to an old family legend, an aged colored slave hid a chest of money and silver during the Civil war, then died of apoplexy before he could get back to his master. Searches at intervals for 40 years brought no trace of the fortune, and the family dismissed it as "an old mammy's tale."

Miss Saunders has been informed that the find is authentic and that the value of the relics is great. Gold coins, none of later date than 1849, and some dating back to 1790, were found in the treasure chest.

Air Factor In Future Warfare

The popular French war ace, Charles Nungesser, is preparing to try out the formidable new egg-shape machine which he has been building in secret.

Designed to attain the highest speed ever registered and equipped with a 700 horse power Fiat engine, the machine is at first destined for scientific research. Nungesser is an admirer of and an experienced pilot in motorless aviation. While he has always experimented with gliding flights in an ordinary airplane with a locked propeller, he has already made ample study of currents at high altitudes in slow moving machines, and his aim now is to see how the air acts at high altitudes when swept with an object covering close on 300 miles an hour.

If, as Nungesser believes, the air in such cases becomes more rigid, and thereby affords greater security to airplanes, he considers the future of flying in exceedingly rapid machines able to attain great heights.

That he will successfully beat all existing speed records he has no doubt, but he takes little notice of this, for, as he remarks: "Any one can have the speed record if they can find a machine made of strong and resisting material and in which it would be possible to place one or more 1,000 horse power engines."

Nungesser introduces a novelties in the flying egg such as the encasement of the wings and their fabrication. Silk cloth and canvas have been done away with and the two small but heavy wings which fit the egg shape cockpit are entirely made of wood so interwoven as to afford the necessary resistance when travelling at great speed.

To afford greater stability to the practically tailless monoplane the wings are drawn forward V-shape at an angle of 130 degrees. The Fiat engine is placed in the fore part of the machine and drives an all steel propeller. High above the engine a steel cupola has been erected to shield pilot and observer or mechanic. The cockpit is composed entirely of laminated wood several inches thick with a circumference of one meter and a half, and at the rear is a huge rudder close on three meters high and a meter wide. The rising and lowering rudders have been done away with at the rear of the machine and instead have been placed on the wings at a point where the planes close into the cockpit. The usual stabilizing alerions at each extremity of the wings have not been allowed.

If experiments are successful Nungesser hopes to transform it either into a large and comfortable passenger carrying machine or else into a deadly army chasing machine. The Frenchman during the war was one of the few pilots to drive a chasing machine equipped with a 37-millimeter gun firing through the propeller. He believes he will be able to put some 47-millimeter guns as well as four machines guns in the "flying egg."

Aviation as the chief weapon of any future war continues to be a topic of grave interest in Paris. When Lieut. Pilot H. Chretien says that the future peace of the world lies not in the hands of diplomats and politicians, but in the scientist who can obtain the most perfect mastery of wireless vibrations, he has a large audience.

According to Lieut. Chretien the world will some day see a huge battleplane, pilotless and conducted solely by wireless from a base off possibly 2,000 miles. This plane's control may even be linked in such a way that from one series of vibrations a veritable armada of planes loaded with high explosive bombs, death-dealing gases and incendiary compounds, may be sent from Berlin, and when hovering over Paris, by merely pressing a button in the control office in Berlin their burden may suddenly be let loose and a large portion of the French capital be ruined in a few hours.

With this pilotless armada constantly before his eyes, Lieut. Chretien produces the only solution of the problem he has created, namely, the discovery of some method of cutting off the wireless control at its source. Apparently this is going to be a difficult task, for in discussing French pilotless aviation recently, M. Branly, the French inventor, insisted he would believe the instruments used in control work that it would be virtually impossible for an enemy to send out wireless waves and interfere with movements of the French planes.

But should any nation obtain perfect mastery of wireless vibrations, according to Lieut. Chretien's thesis, it would mean the elimination of air fighting in warfare, and the return to fixed battle lines, entrenchments and possibly to the old system of fortifications, strong enough to withstand the assaults of Big Berthas.

With superiority of control, it would be possible for a French control operator, on receiving word of the arriving over the frontier of a German pilotless squadron, to wait until the planes were over an open field and then press a button. Immediately every plane would turn its tail upward and nose dive to earth, bombs and all, without accomplishing the destruction it had been sent out to do.

It would even be possible to take the control entirely out of the German squadron station's power, and turn the loaded planes back on the German capital, dropping a few tons on other German towns while en route as a warning that pilotless aviation had not proved a success. But all this is hypothetical, and in the domain of electricians and engineers, and even Lieut. Chretien is willing to admit that such achievement is still very distant.

Male Deer Shed Horns Each Year.

All male deer, known as stags, bucks, or harts, have solid, branching horns, or antlers, which they shed each year. Excepting reindeer, female deer, also called hinds or does, do not bear antlers, nor do the young, which are known as fawns. Antlers are outgrowths from bone and are at first very sensitive, being covered with fine and velvety skin. When the antlers are fully developed the skin dries and is removed by rubbing against trees, leaving bare bones.

FISHER FOLK LORE.

Omens of Misfortune Found Among Seafaring Men.

The fisher folk of the east coast of Scotland have habits and customs different from those of any other section of the working classes.

Except in selling their fish or purchasing the actual necessities, or occasionally borrowing from the bank when assistance is required in the buying of an old or the building of a new boat, they have little to no traffic with the outside world.

It is seldom that fisherman marries other than a fisher lass, and even should she stray her affections to wander, the line is firmly drawn at a cooper or other fish-worker with the "coddling instead," which means that he belongs to a fisher family.

There is a distrust of the "front" ess outsiders are termed—almost amounting to a race prejudice, and this is emphasized in the implicit confidence one fisherman will place in another, although they may be utter strangers at the moment.

It is safe to say that the majority of the Scottish fisher folk are teetotallers, and a fisherman may be met in most of the villages of the teetotal outfit asked to have something. Then it is:—

"Well, I'm a teetotaler in a kind o' a way. Nae bigoted, ye kin; I never took ony pledge. A man's aye best that can templar himsel'! Oh, I'll drink on Hogmanay—that's mare a preen p'int for it. Na, thank ye, I never tak' water."

And half a gill of mountain dew that could peel the bark off a granite monument vanishes.

The fisherman is emphatically of a religious turn. As a preacher he is a marvel. With fewer opportunities than most men for the cultivation of correct speaking, he can go out into the Square and harangue a Pittsburgh, where thousands of his fellows have gathered for the summer herring-fishing, and discourse on a text for twenty minutes or so with an eloquence and grip of his subject which might be envied by many members of the Cloth (says a writer in "Mac Matters").

The fishermen has his share of weaknesses, and not the least of these are the superstitions, carefully discarded by others, and some peculiarly his own, to which he still clings.

In Fifeshire a fisherman's wife caught a neighbor on Sunday morning taking the first jug of hot water from the boiler.

"I ken fine what she was after," said the woman, "She wantit tak' awa' oor Jamie's luck. Ye see, Jamie had a guid fishin' lika day and her man had nothing a' the season."

In one village there lives an old woman who has the reputation of being "nae canny." Should a fisherman meet her on his way to the harbor he would not proceed to sea that day. It is unlucky at any time to meet a bare-footed woman, but the old lady in question is in such bad odour that her name is never mentioned by the villagers, and the ban is extended to several families who bear the same name.

Should one of the name belong to a crew, he is referred to as the "manxie," and when he has to be addressed direct, the circumlocution is used. The number of the house in which the old woman lives is "88," and a perusal of nautical almanacs shows that out of nearly 1,000 boats of all sizes in the district, the Custom House officials have failed to register one "88."

In Buckie one must not speak to a crew on their way to the harbor, as the person doing so will be responsible for any misfortune that may happen during the voyage.

The hare and the salmon are very unlucky. A hardy fisherman has been seen in tears because a mischievous shorehand threw a hare's foot among his haddocks.

Very few of the Moray Firth men will mention the salmon by name. The "beastie" is the cognomen by which it is honored. Perhaps the original idea of the antipathy of the salmon and the hare may be traced to the ingenuity of some crafty landowner.

Clergymen, cats, and swine rank with the hare and the salmon as harbingers of misfortune, and it is unsafe to mention any of those—including "the reverence."

"Discovering" Melba.

Dame Nellie Melba did not win success at a first attempt. It is related that on her early days Sir Arthur Sullivan could find no place for her in the Savoy chorus. Alberto Randegger could not see his way to accept her as a pupil, and others were sufficiently blind to their interests as completely to overlook what might have been a gold mine to them. She was "discovered" in Paris by a singer, by Mathilde Marchesi. After hearing her sing, Marchesi rose from the piano and walked from the room without a word. Following on so many rebuffs, this provoked Melba to tears. These, however, were arrested by the voice of Marchesi calling to her husband: "Salvatori, salvatori, come quickly; I have found a star!" Returning with her husband, Marchesi took Melba's hands in hers, saying, "Mon enfant, if you are serious and will study, I will make of you something wonderful." All the world knows how Marchesi's prophecy has been fulfilled.

A Python's Long Rest.

A monster python at the London Zoo recently broke a two and a half years' fast by devouring a pigeon. He celebrated the feat by eating three more at one meal. Snakes have notoriously erratic appetites, but this particular specimen is evidently bent on making up for lost time. Another python—a 10ft. specimen from India—has recently arrived at the Zoo.

A Wakeman.

Ripon keeps up a custom about 1,000 years old. Every night a "wakeman," attired in official costume, appears before the mayor's house and blows three soleman notes on the "horn of Ripon."

A Young English Chemist.

Miss Helena Stewart, who has opened a chemist's shop in London, is only twenty-one years old and is the youngest qualified chemist in Great Britain.

Hen Fitted With Wooden Leg.

A hen in Carmarthen, Wales, met with an accident which necessitated amputation of its leg at the joint. An amateur veterinary surgeon, replacing the lost limb with a neat wooden leg. The fowl is now able to get about the yard with it peg-leg, and shows no sign of discomfort.

GIRL FOOLED DOCTORS

MADE THEM THINK HER TEMPERATURE WAS NORMAL.

According to Observations of Medical Science She Ought to Have Died But She Did Not Do So—Other Cases Help to Explain Abnormal Women Have Played Similar Tricks.

Miss Evelyn Lyons, a young lady of Escanaba, Michigan, found one of the easiest ways to have her name in every newspaper in the country a short time ago, when doctors reported that her temperature was 114. It remained about this point for two weeks while medical science the world over marvelled. Experienced physicians examined her and were astounded that she continued to live. Such high temperatures have at times been reached in cases of sunstroke, but invariably death followed. In the case of Miss Lyons nothing much could be learned from the fever except her temperature. She was apparently far from being in a dying mood, though at times she writhed about on her bed. Doctors distrusted their clinical thermometers, and then their own eyesight. They called other doctors in. There was no doubt about it. The girl's temperature was 117. Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association, went to Escanaba to report the phenomenon. He discovered that Miss Lyons caused her temperature by touching the thermometer bulb for a second to a hot water bag which she had under the bed clothes. She was just a hysterical faker.

It appears by an examination of the records that in all ages girls have fooled wise men in every sphere. A short time ago the wholecontinent was talking about the mysterious ghosts at Amityville, and a learned expedition sent forth to investigate. The only "ghost" turned out to be Mary Ellen, a young girl who hoodwinked the wise men for weeks at a time. Later on, a young American imposed upon the seasoned credulity of the readers of an evening newspaper by a story of life in the northern wilds. It turned out that his only acquaintance with the wilds has been made in the movies, but this young man was just a persistent liar, as Mary Ellen or Miss Lyons. He was deliberately and consciously lying, while the girls appear to have had the excuse of hysteria. They were consciously lying, but apparently were obeying an impulse which they found themselves powerless to resist. History is full of such cases, though they were not diagnosed at the time they occurred, and the heroines of them ran grave risks. It is true that some of them were considered to be divinely inspired, and that the visions some of them saw were taken as the basis of certain religious beliefs, but usually more were said to be possessed of the devil and were dealt with in the way they had of dealing with witches. Modern science now regards these people, whether witches of saints, to have been the victims of hysteria.

There is the historic case of a babe at Leicester who was said to have taken no nourishment for seven years, and the heroine of whom ran even more striking later on of a Derbyshire girl named Margaret Ann, who lived at Bode, a small village near Spital. The child was said to have taken no food or drink for three years, yet she continued to grow and enjoyed excellent health, and in many other respects was quite a normal child. She was under the observation of the parish priest and Lord Scarsdale's medicians, who left no stone unturned to get to the bottom of the case, but they agreed that she was no ordinary subject. Nothing the medical men was done could induce her to take food or drink, and she was under the most rigid observation. Whenever comes the animal heat since neither eats nor drinks, and was also the body grew when it received no nourishment. It seems clear that the girl must have had adult control rules. She never could have practiced her deception for so long a period.

Women who are afflicted with hysteria usually show abnormal temperatures, but with variations not nearly so remarkable as to cause ill results. The highest temperatures are found usually in cases of unstrokeinflammatory rheumatism. Here the temperature sometimes rises to 106 or 107 degrees, according to Dr. Osler, and is followed by the New York Times. A sunstroke the temperature has been known to reach 110 degrees, usually death ensues within a few hours. In cases of inflammatory rheumatism the temperature has been known to reach 110, but generally always ends in such cases the rise is very gradual, death follows rapidly. In cases of malaria fever the temperature sometimes rises to 106 degrees, but usually drops swiftly. Other cases there can be no recovery. Fever is one of the most common accompaniments of disease in general, one of the first indices, in some cases, that disease exists. In typhoid a temperature of 105 is common. In children's diseases high temperatures arise suddenly and as suddenly fall.

The mean average temperature of man is 98.4 degrees. Each month, his temperature is marked on many publications, but it is not usually being removed from 2 to 4 o'clock in the morning. This highest after eating. The normal temperature of man 2 degrees. Death usually follows temperatures below 80 degrees and above 106, but variations from 75 degrees to 112 have been recorded where the patients survived.

STOOPED TO CONQUER.

Some Royal Bridegrooms Who Married Commoners.

If the Prince of Wales were to choose an un-royal lady for his wife, he will be able to quote many excellent precedents for such a choice; for, many of his royal predecessors have found their brides outside royalty. In fact, until the Royal Marriage Act put an obstacle in the way of such unorthodox matches, our princes were free to take their hands where their hearts could go with them.

When, for example, Edward, the Black Prince, sought a wife, he married his hand on the fairest of princesses, to woo the beautiful Joan Wake, a lady who had no drop of royal blood in her veins, and no ancestor more exalted than a baron. But in Joan the prince found a happiness such as no more exalted wife could have given him; and she also gave him a son to perpetuate our line of kings.

Where his eldest brother led the way, John of Gaunt was glad to follow, when he went a-wooing Catherine Swynford, a lady who had no exalted birth to add to her fortune and charm. She bore four children to her romantic lord; and from her was descended Henry IV., who raised the humble Swynford blood to the throne of England. And did not Lionel, Duke of Clarence, find equal happiness in the lovely Elizabeth de Burgh, whose blood ran in the veins of the fourth of the Edwards?

But the most unconventional of all royal lovers was undoubtedly Henry VIII., who in four of his half-dozen marriages decided to wed where he loved.

"Where my heart goeth," he vowed to pretty Anne Boleyn, "there shall my hand be bestowed."

And though Anne had a city appendix, both to her name for good grandfather, Henry loved her with a passion no emperor's daughter had ever inspired.

And yet, in spite of all his passion and protestations, Anne's beautiful body was scarcely cold before the royal Lothario was vowing love and loyalty at the altar to her successor, Jane Seymour, a lady who had a plain face to commend her to his favor.

And Jane Seymour had the unroyal successors in Henry's fickle heart, to both of whom he was devoted, for a time, with equal passion.

When James, Duke of York, younger brother of the second Charles, decided to take to himself a wife, he chose Anne, daughter of Edward Hyde, Earl of Clarendon, and granddaughter of a Wiltshire squire—a lady of no great birth and little beauty. From this un-royal union came two of England's queens—Mary II. and Anne—to mingle to the rustic squire's blood with that of Stuart kings.

Of the children of Frederick, Prince of Wales, no fewer than three put wedding-rinks on the fingers of commoners. There is little doubt that George III. made a wife of Hannah Lightfoot, the pretty daughter of a Quaker linen-draper in St. James' Market, on whom he first set eyes as she stood in the doorway of her father's shop as he rode to Westminster.

George's younger brother, the Duke of Gloucester, in a similar mood of infatuation, led Lady Waldegrave to the altar; and the Duke of Cumberland, another brother, gave hand to my Lady Luttrell.

No less passionate was Augustus' eldest brother, George, Prince of Wales (later George IV.), in his desertion to Mrs. Fitzherbert, a pretty widow, to whom he succumbed at first sight of her loveliness by the Thames side at Richmond, and whom he married in her drawing room in Park street one December day in 1785.

Such was his infatuation that, when she refused to smile on his wooing, he "rolled on the floor, striking his forehead, tearing his hair, and swearing that he would abandon the world and forever grow." And when she still remained obdurate, he stabbed himself, announced her to him, and at last, could no longer, for the consent his vows and pleadings could never have won.

Bricks From Beans.

Tiles and bricks for interior building purposes can now be made from the residue of castor oil beans.

Specimens of tiles and bricks were shown at the recent New Hampshire Department of the Imperial College of Science.

Hitherto the beans have been put through the process which extracts the oil, and the remainder flung away, or used for fertilizer. It is of course the residue of fat, caustic. No less than two or three tons will left over in one year from the factories.

It has been discovered that under certain conditions this residue up into very excellent tiles, being both tough, light, and warm to walk upon. This is a great advantage over stone tiles, and the cost of manufacture to complete the cost is very little different from stone or mineral composition tiles.

The appearance of the new building material is like pitched stone, only it is not cold to the touch.

Canada's Idle Water Power.

Canada's waterfalls developed 2,940,000 horsepower of electrical energy during 1922. The revenue to manufacturers from this power amounted to $51,000,000, according to a report issued by the federal water powers branch of the Dominion Government.

Ontario, with Niagara Falls as its chief source of power, led in production among the provinces with 1,330,000 horse-power, the report shows. Quebec followed closely with 1,100,000 horse-power, and British Columbia was third with 310,000. The remainder was distributed among Manitoba, Alberta, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Despite the high cost of construction, hydro-power development installed last year totalled 529,000 horse-power. Total capital invested in water power is estimated at $620,658,731. Horse-power development amounts to 357 per 1,000 of Canada's population.

"Demand upon industrial centres for greater production is increasing with the cultivation of new stretches of farm land in the west," the report states. "Industrial experts are urging rapid installation of hydro-power plants with a view to providing machinery and other farm supplies at a lower cost, and thus stimulate the greater settlement of lands."

Water power now in use represents a little over 6 per cent of Canada's total water power resources, which are estimated by the report at 41,700,000 horse-power.

Declares Tanlac Ended Indigestion and Asthma When all Else Failed

"I thought all advertised medicines were about alike until I took Tanlac, and I want to say right here I haven't seen its equal for me. Two years experience," says William Sadd, 28 Mulbery St., Hamilton, Ont.

"For six years, before I used Tanlac, I got in a rundown and weakened condition every spring, and was so stuffed up with asthma and hay-fever I could hardly breathe. I was so nervous at night I would walk the floor. What I ate nauseated me, I had knife-like pains in my stomach and across my back, and could hardly stoop over to lace my shoes.

"The Tanlac treatment is the only medicine that ever helped me, but it fixed me up so fine I am not bothered any more with my old troubles. A little Tanlac now and then keeps me in fine shape, and I feel as active as I did three years ago."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.

Tanlac Vegetable Pills are nature's own remedy for constipation. For sale everywhere.

Fire on Newburgh Road.

What might have been a disastrous fire occurred on the farm of Mr. Stewart Shelton, Newburgh Road, on Monday afternoon. Spontaneous combustion started a blaze in a straw stack along side the implement shed and between it and the barn. Only strenuous work by neighbors, assisted by members of the Napanee fire brigade, was the fire confined to the straw stack and shed. Mr. Shelter had his right hand badly burned while trying to put out the fire before assistance arrived.

The Storm on Sunday.

A particularly severe electric storm passed over Napanee and vicinity on Sunday, doing considerable damage. The Hydro Electric lines suffered with broken wires and transformers burned out, so that they were only able to maintain a partial service.

The barn on the farm of Mr. Frank Sagar, North Fredericksburgh, was completely destroyed by fire due to lightning, with a loss of building and contents.

At Mr. Vine's house, at Vine's Corners, while the family were at supper, a bolt of lightning came in the front door, passed across the table and out the back door without doing any damage.

Mr. Brooks, who lives on the south side of Bridge street, east, was struck by lightning and rendered unconscious, several hours work by doctors was necessary to bring him around.

Airplanes for Week-End Trips.

PARIS, June 25.—At least a third of the pilots and passengers at the Aerial Week-End organized by the Aero Club de France, are women.

More than fifty planes came from England, Belgium and all parts of France, making the trip in two or three hours at the most. The women declare it is a much more comfortable way to travel than automobiles, especially as it dustiens. They all stepped out of their machines trim and ready for tea.

The Aero Club is pushing the idea that the air route is the most convenient one for week-end trips.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, June 25.—Around 5,000 head of cattle per week seems to be about the requirement as regards supply at this market just now. Trade was brisk and prices were up a quarter cent. And with volume of over Monday of last week another gain of 10c to 15c per cwt. was registered. Everything considered, including the fact that a good share of the offerings were off grass, the trade held up well. The export buy included some steers that were bought on what had been generally recognized as export weight, British market demand for the moment being for lighter weights. The export trade in store cattle was steady up to Wednesday's close, at 5c to 5½c. There was plenty of enquiry all week for cattle to go to grass, but the heavier trade was sufficiently active to account for anything showing dressing possibilities, and the farmers secured only a few loads of canners and choosers at prices ranging from 4½c to 4¾c.

Monday's supply of calves was light, and this was reflected by a gain in advance of 50c to a dollar per cwt. in price. But, with receipts back to normal by midweek, values went back to last week's closing level, and there was difficulty in securing 9c per pound for the best calves offered on Thursday, while common to medium calves were slow at 4c to 5c per pound.

Sheep and lamb offerings showed a gain of 1,000 head over the week previous, with lambs the feature of the supply. Thursday's range for choice was 13c to 13c, with culls at 10c to 12c per pound. Sheep held steady to a shade

"Hoots, Jock, you're daft," says he. "Daft or no, I'm going."

"Then you'll have no blessing from me."

"Then I'll go without."

At this my mother gave a screech and throws her arms about my neck. I saw her hand, all hard and worn and knobby with the work that she had done for my upbringing, and it pleaded with me as words could not have done. My heart was soft for her, but my will was as hard as a flint edge. I put her back in her chair with a kiss, and then ran to my room to pack my bundle. It was already growing dark, and I had a long walk before me; so I threw a few things together and hastened out. As I came through the side door someone touched my shoulder, and there was Edie in the gloaming.

"Silly boy" said she. "You are not really going? I don't want you to go Jock."

"You said that the folk in the country were fit for nothing better. You that are not like that. You think no more of me than of those doves in the cote. You think I'm nobody at all. I'll show you different." All my troubles came out in hot little spurts of speech. She ordered up as I spoke and looked at me in her queer, half-mocking, half-petting fashion.

"Oh, I think so little of you as that," said she. "And that is the reason why you are going away. Well then, Jock, will you stay if I am—if I am kind to you?"

We were face to face and close together, and in an instant the thing was done. My arms were round her, and I was kissing her, and kissing her, and kissing her, on her mouth, her cheeks, her eyes, and pressing her to my heart and whispering to her that she was all to me, and that I could not be without her. She said nothing, but it was long before she turned her face aside, and when she pushed me back it was not very hard.

"Why, you're quite your own masterful, old impudent self," said she, patting her hair with her two hands. "You have tossed me, Jock. I had no idea that you would be so forward."

But all my fear of her was gone, and a love unfold better than ever was boiling in my veins. I took her up again and kissed her, as if it were my right.

"You are my very own now," I cried. "I shall not go to Berwick, but I'll stay and marry you."

But she laughed when I spoke of marriage. "Silly boy! Silly boy!" said she, with her forefinger up, and then when I tried to lay hands on her again she gave a little dainty courtesy and was off into the house.

CHAPTER IV.

The Choosing of Jim.

And then there came ten weeks which were like a dream, and are so now to look back upon. I would weary you were I to tell you what passed between us, but oh! how earnest and fateful and all-important it was at the time. Her waywardness, her ever-varying moods, now bright, now dark like a meadow under drifting clouds, her causeless angers, her sudden repentances, each in turn filling me with joy or sorrow—they were my life, and all the rest was but emptiness. But ever deep down behind all my other feelings was a vague disquiet—a fear that I was like the man who set forth to lay hands upon the rainbow, and that the real Edie Calder, however near she might seem, was in truth forever beyond my reach.

It was after Christmas, but the winter had been mild, with just frost enough to make it safe walking over the peat bogs. One fresh morning Edie had been out early, and she came back to breakfast with a fleck of color on her cheeks.

"Has your friend, the doctor's son come home, Jack?" says she.

"I heard that he was expected."

"Ah, then it must have been him that I met on the muir."

"What? You met Jim Horscroft?"

"I am sure it must be he. A splendid-looking man, a hero, with curly black hair, a short, straight nose, and gray eyes. He was dressed in grey, and he has a grand, deep, strong voice."

"He, he, you spoke to him?" said I. She colored a little, as if she had said more than she meant, and fell to gazing where the ground was a little soft, and he warned me of it," she said.

"Ah, it must have been dear old Jim," said I. "Why, heart alive! here is the very man himself!" I had seen him through the kitchen window, and now I rushed out with my half-eaten bannock in my hand to greet him. He ran forward, too, with his great hand out and his eye shining.

"Ah, Jock!" he cried. "It's good to see you again. There are no friends like the old ones." Then suddenly he stuck in his speech and stared, with his mouth open, over my shoulder. I turned, and there was Edie, with such a merry, roguish smile, standing in the door. How proud I felt of her, and of myself too, as I looked at her.

"This is my cousin, Miss Edie Calder, Jim," said I.

"De you often take walks before breakfast, Mr. Horscroft?" she asked, still with that roguish smile.

"Yes," said he, staring at her with all his eyes.

"So do I, and generally over yonder," said she; "but you are not very hospitable to your friend, Jack. If you do not do the honors I shall have to take your place for the credit of West Inch."

Well, in another minute we were in with the old folk, and Jim had his plate of porridge laided out for him, but hardly a word would he speak, but sat, with his spoon in his hand, staring at Cousin Edie. She shot little twinkling glances across at him all the time, and it seemed to me that she was amused at his backwardness, and that she tried by what she said to give him heart.

"Jack was telling me that you were studying to be a doctor," said she. "But oh! how hard it must be, and how long it must take before one can gather so much learning as that."

"It takes me long enough," Jim answered, ruefully, "but I'll beat it yet."

"How candid and truthful you are!" she cried, and so they went on, she deckling him with every virtue and twisting his words to make him play the part, in the way that I knew so well. Before she was done I could see that his head was bursting with the beauty and her kindly words. I thrilled with pride to think he should think so well of my kin.

"Isn't she fine, Jim?" I could not help saying when she stood alone outside the door, he lighting his pipe before he set off home.

"Fine!" he cried. "I never saw her match."

"We're going to be married," said I.

The pipe fell out of his mouth, and he stood staring at me. Then he picked it up and walked off without a word. I thought that he would likely come back, but he never did, and I saw him far off striding up the brae with his chin on his chest.

But I was not to forget him, for Cousin Edie had a hundred questions to ask me about his boyhood, about his strength, about the women that he was likely to know; there was no satisfying her. And then again, later in the day, I heard of him, but in a less pleasant fashion.

It was my father who came home in the evening with his mouth full of poor Jim. He had been deadly drunk since midday, had been down to Westhouse Links to fight the gypsy champion, and it was not certain that the man would live through it. To see Jim, my father had met Jim on the highroad, dour as a thunder cloud, and with an insult in his eye for every man that passed him. "Guid sakes!" said the man, "I'll no' be the one to pity Jim Jerdie for himsel' if breaking bones will do it." Cousin Edie laughed at all this, and I laughed because she did, but I was not so sure that it was funny.

On the third day afterward Jim was going up Corriemuir by the sheep track, when who should I see striding down but Jim himself. But he was another man from the big, kindly fellow who had supped his porridge with us the other morning. He had no cellar nor tie, his vest was open, his hair matted, and his face mottled like a man who has drunk heavily overnight. He carried an oak stick, and he slashed at the whin bushes on either side of the path.

"Why, Jim!" said I.

But he looked at me in the way that I had often seen at school when the devil was strong in him, and when he knew that he was in the wrong, and yet set his will to brazen it out. Not a word did he say, but he brushed past me on the narrow path, and swaggered on, still brandishing his stick and cutting at the bushes.

Ah well, I was not angry with him. I was sorry, very sorry, and that was all. Of course I was sorry on behalf of that I could see how the matter stood. He was in love with Edie, and he could not bear to think that I should have her. Poor devil! how could he help it? And how should he think the same. There was a time when I should have wondered that a girl could have turned a strong man's head like that, but I knew more about it now.

For a fortnight I saw nothing of Jim Horscroft, and then came the Thursday which was to change the whole current of my life.

I had woke early that day, and, with a little thrill of joy, which is a rare thing to feel when a man first opens his eyes, Edie had been kinder than usual the night before, and I had fallen asleep with the thought that maybe at last I had caught the rainbow, and had without any jugglings or make-believes, she was learning to love plain Jack Calder of West Inch. It was this thought, still at my heart, which had given me that little morning chirrup of joy. And then I remembered that if I hastened I might be in time for her, for it was her custom to go out with the sunrise.

But I was too late. When I came to her door it was half open and the room empty. Well, thought I, at least I may meet her and have the homeward walk with her. I zigzagged up the steep pathway, breathing in the thin, keen morning air, and humming a life as I went, until I came to a little short of breath, among the whins upon the top. Looking down the long slope of the farther side, I saw Cousin Edie as I had expected, and I saw Jim Horscroft walking by her side.

They were not far away, but too taken up with each other to see me. She was walking slowly, with the little petulant cock of her dainty head which I knew so well, and her eyes away from him, and shooting out a word from time to time. He paced along beside her, looking down at her and bending his head in the eagerness of his talk. Then, as he said something, she placed her hand with a caress, upon his arm, and he, carried off his feet, plucked her up and kissed her again and again. At the sight I could neither cry out nor move, but stood with a heart of lead and the face of a dead man staring down at them. I saw her hand passed over his shoulder, and that his kisses were as welcome to her as ever mine had been.

Then he set her down again, and I found that this had been their parting, for indeed in another hundred paces they would have come in view of the upper windows of the house. She walked slowly away, with a wave back once or twice, and he stood looking after her. I waited until she was some way off, and then down I came, but so taken up was he that I was within a hand's reach of him before he whisked round upon me. He tried to smile as his eyes met mine.

"I saw you," I gasped, and my throat had turned as dry that I spoke like a man with a quinsy.

"Did you so?" said he, and he gave a little whistle. "Well, on my life, Jock, I'm not sorry. I was thinking of coming up to West Inch this very day and having it out with you. Maybe its better as it is."

"You've been a fine friend," said I.

"Well, now, be reasonable, Jock," said he, shoving his hands into his pockets and rocking to and fro as he stood. "Let me show you how it stands. Look me in the eye and you'll see that I don't lie. It's this way. I had quite made up my mind, last night before I came that morning, and there were things which made me look upon her as free, and, thinking that, I let my mind dwell on her. Then you said she wasn't free but was promised to you, and that was the worst knock I've had for a time. It clean put me off, and I made a fool of myself for some days, and it's a mercy I'm not in Berwick jail. Then by chance I met her again—on my soul, Jock, it was chance for me—and when I spoke of you she laughed at the thought. It was cousin and cousin, she said, but as for her not being free, or you being more to her than a friend, it was fool's talk. So you see, Jock, I was not so much to blame after all, the more so as she promised that she would let you see by her conduct that you were mistaken in thinking that you had any claim upon her. You must have noticed that she has hardly had a word for you for these last two weeks."

I laughed bitterly. "It was only last night," said I, "that she told me that I was the only man in all this earth that she could ever bring herself to love."

Jim Horscroft put out a shaking hand and laid it on my shoulder, while he pushed his face forward to look into my eyes.

"Jock Calder," said he, "I never knew you tell a lie. You are not trying to score trick against trick, are you? Honest, now, between man and man."

"It's God's truth," said I.

He stood looking at me, and his face had set like that of a man who is having a hard fight with himself. It was a long two minutes before he spoke.

"See here, Jock," said he, "this woman is fooling us both. D'you hear, man?—she's fooling us both. She loves you at West Inch, and she loves me on the brae-side, and in her devil's heart she cares a whin blossom for neither of us. Let's join hands, man, and send the hell-fire hussy to the right-about."

But this was too much. I could not curse her in my own heart, and still less could I stand by and hear another man do it, not though it was my oldest friend.

"Don't you call names!" I cried.

"Ach! you sicken me with your soft talk. I'll call her what she should be called."

"Will you, though?" said I, lugging off my coat. "Look you here, Jim Horscroft, if you say another word against her I'll lick it down your throat if you were as big as Berwick castle. Try me, and see!"

He peeled off his coat down to the elbows and then he slowly pulled it on again.

"Don't be such a fool, Jock," said he. "Two old friends mustn't fall out over such a—well, there, I won't say it. Well, by the Lord! if she hasn't nerve for us both."

I looked around, and there she was, not twenty yards from us, looking as cool and easy and placid as we were hot and fevered.

"I was nearly home," said she, "when I saw you two boys very busy talking, so I came all the way back to know what it was about."

Horscroft took a run forward and caught her by the wrist. She gave a little squeal at the sight of his face, but he pulled her toward where I was standing.

"Now, Jock, we've had tomfoolery enough," said he. "Here she is. Shall we take her word as to which she likes? She can't trick us now that we're both together."

"I am willing," said I.

"And so am I. If she goes for you I swear I'll never so much as turn an eye on her again. Will you do as much for me?"

"Yes, I will."

"Well, then, look here, you! We're both honest men and friends, and we tell each other no lies, and so we know your double ways. I know what you said last night. Jock knows what you said today. D'you see? Now, then, fair and square! Here we are before you, once and have done. Which is it to be, Jock or me?"

You would have thought that the woman would have been overwhelmed with shame, but instead of that her eyes were shining with delight, and I dare wager that it was the proudest moment of her life. As she looked from one to the other of us, with the cold morning sun glittering on her face, I had never seen her look so lovely. Jim felt it also, I am sure, for he dropped her wrist, and the harsh lines were softened upon his face.

"Come, Edie! Which is it to be?" he asked.

"Naughty boys; to fall out like this," she cried. "Cousin Jack, you know how fond I am of you."

"Oh, then, go to him!" said Horscroft.

"But I love nobody but Jim. There is nobody that I love like Jim." She snuggled up to him, and laid her cheek against his breast.

"You see, Jock!" said he, looking over her shoulder.

I did see, and away I went for West Inch, another man from the time that I left it.

CHAPTER V.

The Man From the Sea.

Well, I was never one to sit groaning over a cracked pot; if it cannot be mended, then it is the part of a man to say no more of it. For weeks I had an aching heart; indeed, it is a little sore now, after all these years and a happy marriage, when I think of it. But I kept a brave face on me, and above all I did as I had promised that day on the hillside. I was a brother to her, and no more, though there were times when I had to put a curb upon myself.

For the most part she and Jim were happy enough. It was all over the countryside that they were to be married when he had passed his degree, and he would come up to West Inch four nights a week to sit with us. My folk were pleased enough about it, and I tried to be pleased too, but—

We used to take long rambles together, Jim and I, and it is about one of those that I now want to tell you. We had passed over Bramston heath and round the clump of firs which seems to be the top of Mayo Hillfrom the sea wind. It was spring, and the year was a forward one, so that the trees were well leaved by the end of April. It was as warm as a summer day, and we were the more surprised when we saw a huge fire roaring upon the grass plat before the major's door. There was a fir tree in it, and the flames were spouting up to a high and most windy column. Jim and I stood staring; but we stared the more when out came the major, with a great quart pot in his hand, and at his heels his old sister, who kept house for him, and one of the maids, and all four began capering about the fire. He was a douce, quiet man, as all the country knew; and here he was, like Old Nick at the carlins' dance, hobbling round and waving his drink above his head. We had to set off running, and he waved the more when he saw us coming.

"Peace!" he roared. "Huzza, boys! Peace!"

And at that we both fell to dancing and shouting too, for it had been such a weary war, as far back as we could remember, and the shadow had lain so long over us that it was wondrous to feel that it was lifted. Indeed it was too much to believe, but the major laughed our doubts to scorn.

"Aye, aye, it is true," he cried, stopping with his hand to his side. "The allies have beaten Boney. He's been thrown up the sponge, and his people are all swearing allegiance to Louis XVIII."

"And the emperor?" I asked; "will they spare him?"

"There's some talk of sending him to Elba, where he'll be out of mischief's way. But his officers—there are some of them who will not get off so lightly. Some deeds have been done these last twenty years that have not seemed to be forgotten. There are few [illegible] to be settled. But it's peace, peace!" and away he went once more with his great tankard, hopping round his bonfire.

Well, we stayed some time with the major, and then away we went down to the beach, Jim and I, talking about this great news and all that would come of it. How little did Jim know at that moment, as he strode along by my side so full of health and of spirits, that he had reached the extreme summit of life, and that from that hour all would in truth be upon the downward slope.

There was a little haze out to sea, for it had been very misty in the early morning, though the sun had thinned it. As we looked seaward we suddenly saw the sail of a small boat break out through the fog and come bobbing along toward the land. A single man was seated in the sheets, and she yawed about as she ran, as though he were of two minds whether to beach her or no. At last, determined, it may be, by our presence, he made straight for us, and her keel grated upon the shingle at our very feet. He dropped his sail, climbed out, and pulled her bows up onto the beach.

"Great Britain?" he asked again, with a quick tap of his foot on the shingle.

"Yes," said I, while Jim burst out laughing.

"England? Scotland?"

"Scotland. But it's England past yonder trees."

"Bon! I know where I am now. I've been in a fog without a compass for nearly three days, and I didn't thought I was ever to see land again." He spoke English fairly enough, but with some strange turn of speech from time to time.

"Where did you come from, then?" asked Jim.

"I was in a ship that was wrecked," said he shortly. "What is the town down yonder?"

"It is Berwick."

"Ah, well, it must get stronger before I can go further." He turned toward the boat, and as he did so he gave a lurch, and would have fallen had he not caught the prow. On this he seated himself, and looked round him with a frown, as flushed into his two eyes that blazed like a wild beast's.

"Voltigeurs de la Garde!" he roared in a voice like a trumpet call, and then again, "Voltigeurs de la Garde!" He waved his hat above his head, and suddenly pitching forward upon his face on the sand, he lay all huddled into a little brown heap.

Jim Horscroft and I stood and stared at each other. The coming of the man had been so strange, and his questions, and now this sudden turn. We took him by a shoulder each and turned him upon his back. His lips were bloodless, and his breath would scarce shake a feather.

"He's dying, Jim," I cried.

"Aye, for want of food and water. There's not a drop or a crumb in the boat. Maybe there's something in the bag." He sprang in and brought out a black leather bag, which, with a large blue coat, was the only thing in the boat. It was locked, but Jim had it open in a moment. It was half full of gold pieces.

Neither of us had ever seen so much before—no, nor a tenth part of it. There must have been hundreds of them, all bright new British sovereigns. And so taken up were we that we had forgotten all about their owner, until a groan took our thoughts back of him. His lips were bluer than ever, and his jaw had dropped. I can see his open mouth now, with its row of white, wolfish teeth.

"My God! he's off," cried Jim. "Here, run to the burn, Jock, for a hatful of water. Quick, man, or he's gone! I'll loosen his things the while."

Away I tore, and was back in a minute with as much water as would stay in my Glengarry. Jim had pulled open the man's coat and shirt, and we doused the water in him, and forced some between his lips. It had a good effect, for after a gasp or two he sat up, and rubbed his eyes slowly, like a man who is waking from a deep sleep. But neither Jim nor I were looking at his face now, for our eyes were fixed on his uncovered chest.

There were two deep red puckers in it, one just below the collar bone, and the other about halfway down on the right side. The skin of his body was extremely white up to the brown line of his neck, and the angry crinkled spots looked the more vivid against his bonfire.

Well, we stayed some time with the major, and then away we went down to the beach, Jim and I, talking about this great news and all that would come of it. How little did Jim know at that moment, as he strode along by my side so full of health and of spirits, that he had reached the extreme summit of life, and that from that hour all would in truth be upon the downward slope.

There was a little haze out to sea, for it had been very misty in the early morning, though the sun had thinned it. Bonaventure de Lapp. I am a soldier and a lodger by trade, and I have come from Dunkirk, as you may see printed upon the boat."

"I thought that you had been shipwrecked?" said I.

But he looked at me with the straight gaze of an honest man.

"That is right," said he. "But the ship went from Dunkirk, and this is one of her boats. The crew got away in the long boat, and she went down so quickly that I had no time to put anything into her. That was on Monday."

"And today's Thursday. You have been three days without bite or sup."

"It is too long," said he. "Twice before I have been for two days, but never quite so long as this. Well, I shall leave my boat here, and see whether I can get lodgings in any of these little grey houses up on the hillsides. Why is that great fire burning over yonder?"

"It is one of our neighbors who has served against the French. He is rejoicing because peace has been declared."

"Oh! you have a neighbor who has served, then? I am glad, for I, too, have seen a little soldiering here and there." He did not look glad, but he drew his brows down over his keen eyes.

"You are French, are you not?" I asked, as we all walked up the hill together, he with his black bag in his hand, and I swinging blue cloak slung over his shoulder.

"Well, I am of Alsace," said he. "And you know they are more German than French. For myself, I have been in so many lands that I feel at home in all. I have been a great traveler. And where do you think that I might find a lodging?"

I can scarcely tell now, on looking back with the great gap of five-and-thirty years between what happened this singular man had made upon me. Jim Horscroft was a fine man, and Maj. Elliott was a brave one, but they both lacked something that this wanderer had. It was the quick, alert look, the flash of the eye, the nameless distinction which is so hard to fix. And then, we had saved him when he lay gasping on the shingle, and one's heart always softens toward what one has once helped.

"If you will come with me," said I, "I have little doubt that I can find you a bed for a night or two, and by that time you will be better able to make your own arrangements."

He pulled off his hat, and bowed with all the grace imaginable. But Jim Horscroft pulled me by the sleeve and led me aside.

"You're mad, Jock," he whispered, "the fellow is a common adventurer. What do you want to get mixed up with him for?"

But I was always as obstinate a man as ever laced his boots, and if you jerked me back it was the finest way of sending me to the front.

"He's a stranger, and it's our part to look after him," said I.

"You'll be sorry for it," said he.

"Maybe so."

"If you don't think of yourself you might think of your cousin."

"Edie can take very good care of herself."

"Well, then, the devil take you, and you may do what you like," cried he, in one of his sudden flushes of anger. Without a word of farewell to either of us he turned off upon the track that led up toward his father's house.

Bonaventure de Lapp smiled at me as we walked on together.

"I didn't thought he liked me very much," said he. "I can see very well that he has made a quarrel with you because you are taking me to your home. Should he think of me then? Does he think, perhaps, that I have stole the gold in my bag, or what is it that he fears?"

"Tut! I neither know nor care," said I. "No stranger shall pass our door without a crust and a bed." With my head cocked, and feeling as if I was doing something very fine, instead of being the most egregious fool south of Edinburgh, I marched on down the path, with my new acquaintance at my elbow.

CHAPTER VI.

A Wandering Eagle.

My father seemed to be much of Jim Horscroft's opinion, for he was not over warm to this new guest, and cooked him up and down with a very questioning eye. He set a dish of vinegared herrings before him, however, and I had the satisfaction of observing that even when my companion ate nine of them, he was never always our portion. When at last he had finished, Bonaventure de Lapp's wide mouth was gaping over his eyes, for I doubt not that he had been supperless as well as foodless for these three days. It was but a poor room to admit, I led him, but he threw himself down upon the couch, wrapped his big blue cloak around him, and was asleep in an instant. He was a very sigh and strong snorer, and, as my room was next to his, I had reason to remember that we had a stranger within our gates.

When I came down in the morning I found that he had been beforehand with me, for he was seated opposite my father at the window table in the kitchen, their heads almost touching, and a little roll of gold pieces between them. As I came in my father looked up at me, and I saw a light of greed in his eyes such as I had never seen before. He caught up the money with an eager clutch, and swept it into his pocket.

"Very good, mister," said he. "The room's yours, and you pay always on the third of the month."

"Ah, and here is my first friend," cried De Lapp, holding out his hand to me with a smile which was kindly enough, and yet had that touch of patronage which a man uses when he smiles to his dog. "I am myself again now, thanks to my excellent supper and good night's rest. Ah, it is hunger that takes the courage from a man. That most, and cold next."

"Aye, that's right," said my father. "I've been out on the moors in a snowdrift for six-and-thirty hours, and I ken what it is like."

"I once saw three thousand men starve to death," remarked De Lapp putting out his hands to the fire. "Day by day they got thinner and more like apes, and they did come down to the edge of the pontoons where we did keep them, and they howled with rage and pain. The first few days their howls went over the whole city, but after a week our sentries on the bank could not hear them, so weak they had fallen."

"And they died?" I exclaimed.

"They held out a very long time. Austrian grenadiers they were, of the corps of Szarowitz, fine, stout men, as big as your friend of yesterday, but when the town fell there were but four hundred alive, and a man could lift them three at a time, as if they were little monkeys. It was a pity." Ah, my friend, you will do me the honors with madame and with mademoiselle."

COMMUNITY SINGING

Get Together and "Let All the People Sing."

Folks Generally Enjoy Public Singing—Music Always Popular in the Country—Community singing Includes All Present—Vary the Program From Grave to Gay.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Human beings are gregarious. The dictum that it is not good for man to be alone is not confined to things connubial. Man by nature is a mixer. Folks will flock. Nothing draws like a crowd. Let it be known that "They're all going to be there," and they all will try to be there to see them all, and if it be a public singsong, to hear them.

The Grange, the Farmers' Institutes, and the U.F.O organizations have already done away with much of the old-time isolation of country life, and the energy shown by those younger in years who have participated in the activities of School Fairs and Boys' and Girls' Clubs has also shown that a new day has arrived for more clubable conditions in rural neighborhoods. Community singing is a social solidifier.

Everybody Enjoys Singing.

As the result of years of experience with Y.M.C.A.'s, men and boys' clubs, and military camps, I have come to the conclusion that people enjoy more than any other music that in which they take part publicly. A community sing-song, no matter where indulged in, always acts as a social tonic. It is a solvent of creed, caste and ultra dignity. It catches all present if they will only catch the tune. It takes the croak out of the throat, the furrows from the worried brow, the hard lines from mouths that have been growing grim, and the crowsfeet from the corner of the eyes. It melts the icy manner. It knocks the starch out of even the so-called superior people. To sing together is to get together.

I have seen hard-headed business and professional men who have been looked upon with awe or fear by their employees, turn up at banquets or club gatherings in the city and drop all their dignity and "front" as they joyously bellowed some popular ditty, or solemnly joined in a sentimental camp song, and doing it as if fate of nations depended upon their being heard. And, with a little coaxing, a farmer can outchant any city chap, because of better chest and lung development.

Music Always Popular in the Country.

Music has always had a leading place in rural entertainment. The old-fashioned singing school gave a generation or two of agriculturists an ear for melody, and reflected itself in the volume of congregational singing that obtained forty years ago. To-day in church assemblies that heartiness and volume is very much wanting.

Community singing will do much to revive the robustious and not less pleasing vocalism of the good old days. The people who can sing with vim "Keep the Home Fires Burning" or "Pack Up Your Troubles in Your Old Kit Bag," are likely to be just as hearty in exhorting you to "Count Your Blessings," or to "Brighten the Corner Where You Are."

Community Singing Includes All Present.

Real community singing implies a general participation. Everybody should have at least a smack at the choruses. A capable leader with both taste and gumption can bring hearty and genuine melody out of any rural gathering. Simple methods and knowledge of human nature are all that are needed. He will first try out the juniors, and children will never refuse to sing. Then the girls will be heard by themselves, followed by the boys. Now we are getting along. The next thing we know the leader has the women carolling along all by themselves; and then, wonder of wonders, he calls upon "men only" to sing, and they get at it like the good sports that they are, so as to show the women folks and the kiddies that music is something that is in the soul of all, and that driving a team in the field is a capital aid toward a rich and magnificent baritone.

Vary the Program From Grave to Gay.

Then let us have community singing, and plenty of it; but let it be something more than mere singsong. Anything decent will do to begin with, and the simpler the better, as a sort of limbering up exercise. But let something more ambitious be attempted now and then, such as glees, anthems, cantatas, or perhaps oratorios, with big soloists from the cities as stars, but with all hands drilled for the choruses. Some time an easy and clean comic opera might be put on, but with no intention of crowding out the more solid music, for it is well to remember the force and justness of that very practical observation of the elder Pliny (lib. iv, cap. xi, 24), "The lemon, as well as the sugar, is needed to make the punch."

Community singing should be encouraged. It is a social, physical, mental, and moral tonic. Less public benefactions have been bonused by the state.—Thos. McGillicuddy, Statistics and Publication Branch.

Good tomato land is neither extremely rich nor very poor, but just such land as would grow extra good corn. Land that was manured heavily the previous year will generally grow good tomatoes.

No nation has ever achieved permanent greatness unless this greatness was based on the well-being of a great farmer class, for it is upon the welfare of farmers, material and moral, that the welfare of the nation ultimately rests.—Theodore Roosevelt.

WALNUT INVESTMENT

It Pays to Plant Walnuts and Wait Fifty Years.

No Better Legacy for the Farm Lad—The Government Forestry Branch Will Assist—Tree-Growing Requires Little Labor—Black Walnut Trees As Memorials—How to Treat Poison Ivy.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

"Say, Mr. Forester, if a boy of my age were to plant an acre of black walnut this spring would I live to see the trees large enough to be used for the building of a house to shelter me in my old age?"

"Yes, my lad, you could plant the trees to-day, and in fifty years time the trees would be large enough to cut into interior finishing lumber for your house."

There is some satisfaction in planting a tree and watching it grow to merchantable size.

A Walnut Tree Grows for Many Years.

A walnut tree will keep growing long after it has passed the half century mark, and keeps on making timber until it is one hundred and fifty years old. However, a very nice tree can be grown in fifty years on good soil; yes, large enough to make all the finishing lumber for the interior of a house. Ten acres of land planted under sane forestry methods with walnut will make, in time, a fine tract of valuable timber, which when ready to harvest, would at present prices be worth $1,000 per acre.

No Better Legacy Could Be Left.

A man could leave no better legacy for his heirs than a block of good timber. The long time between seedtime and harvest in forestry frightens the average mortal, and deters him from planting forest trees. But people should not take the long time view seriously. Generations of humans are yet to be born to live in this country, and since the present generation has largely destroyed the original timber, it is only just and fair that we should provide for the wood and lumber requirements of the future. On nearly every farm there is some waste land or the remnant of a wood lot. It may be odd, rough spots or sandy hills, areas that have not produced profitable grain or grass crops and which could well be used for the growing of wood.

The Government Forestry Branch Will Help.

The Forestry Branch of the Lands and Forestry Department is co-operating with four hundred Ontario farmers in which the Forestry officials try to point the way to success in wood lot management. As a result of such co-operation, many walnut, green ash, and red oak seedlings have been given a start toward useful production. A small seed will grow into a big tree. Nature does nearly all the work; man simply plants the seed or the little seedling tree and waits. The young forest is established by planting a tree every six feet, and the trees together will so force crowding the trees that the trees will start to grow tall, straight stems. As the crowding becomes too great for thrift, alternate trees are taken out. These thinnings can be used as fence rails, gate material, small lumber, such as chair and table legs, lamp stands, curtain poles, etc. So there is a source of revenue after the trees have been planted twenty years that will take care of the overhead expenses incidental to maintenance.

Very Little Labor Required in Tree-Growing.

With the farm labor situation never satisfactory, and many farmers trying to crop twice as much land as they can handle properly, tree-planting should show the way out. If the people of Ontario are to use wood in the house-building of the future, or have to have fuel for the hearth, a lot of land owners must do more forest planting very soon.—L. Stevenson, Sec. Dept. of Agriculture.

Black Walnut Trees As Memorials.

Planting of black walnut trees as memorials to soldiers is recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture. It is pointed out that the black walnut played a valiant part in the World War. The wood was used for gunstocks and airplane propellers, and the nutshells contributed carbon for gas masks, while the kernels were used in emergency rations for the boys in the trenches. Demand for the wood for war purposes depleted the number of fine old trees, and this method is suggested for filling their places.

How to Treat Ivy Poisoning.

In the early stages of ivy poisoning remedies having a fatty or oily base, such as ointments, should not be used, as the grease or oil tends to disseminate the poison. According to specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. Instead they advise simple remedies such as lotions, applications of solution of cooking soda or of Epsom salt, one or two heaping teaspoons to a cup of water. Fluid extract of grindelia, diluted with 4 to 8 parts of water, is often used.

Solutions of this kind may be applied with light bandages or clean cloths, which should be kept moist, and should be changed and discarded frequently to avoid infection. During the night, or when moist applications are not in use, the poisoned surfaces should be carefully cleaned and dried and left exposed to the air rather than tightly bandaged. In the later stages, after the toxic principle has exhausted itself, zinc-oxide ointment and similar mild antiseptic and astringent applications hasten healing.

The practical dairyman has learned that any radical changes in the quality of his product should be made gradually if the milk flow is not to suffer.

LOST—A CORNER STONE.

Trinity College Has Gone Through Strange Experience.

University students, have, from time immemorial, been accused of mad pranks, but who ever heard of them playfully hiding a corner-stone? Yet the dignified officials of staid old Trinity College, Toronto, have for days been romping about the college walls looking for the missing stone, which records indicate was laid by the Metropolitan of Canada, the Archbishop of Algoma, in the year 1852. The precise nature of the contents resting within the stone are known, including valuable documents relating to the founding of the college, and coins of the period, but the records neglect to denote the location in which it was placed.

It is understood that there is but one person now living who saw the actual laying of the stone, 71 years ago, that is Elmes Henderson, then but a boy in short trousers, who in after years graduated from the college, B.A., '61, M.A., '77. Mr. Henderson remembers the impressive ceremonies which accompanied the laying of the stone when the Lieut.-Governor drove from Government House through streets lined by the militia and thousands of onlookers to the college on Queen street west situated at what is now the north end of Strachan avenue, a district which was then far out of town and lying in the open fields. But as to the exact location in the buildings in which the stone was laid, he has no recollection.

As it has been the intention of the college officials to lay very shortly the corner-stone of the magnificent new Trinity which is now under construction on Hoskin avenue and to deposit therein the records to be taken from the old stone, there is every likelihood that these ceremonies will be postponed unless the efforts of the searchers in locating it are successful. As terraces were in later years built against parts of the college, it is believed that it may in this way have been hidden, and workmen have in recent weeks been employed in digging holes against the side of the building in emulation of their more illustrious archeological brethren in Egypt.

Corner-stones are customarily laid at the northeast corners of buildings, but Trinity would seem to have provided the exception. The documents, ceremonies attendant and contents of the stone are established, but its position remains a complete mystery.

Meanwhile students have been enjoying their new game of "Corner-stone, corner-stone, who's got the corner-stone?" and are imploring worried professors that they may be released from mutually irksome lectures and approaching examinations in order that they may solve the problem. Every student has his hunch. If they were turned loose with shovels their frenzied excavating would result in as many holes being dug in the terrace surrounding the college as there are students.

The Oldest Holiday.

Saturday afternoon is our oldest holiday. It dates from the days of the Anglo-Saxons. King Edgar, in the tenth century, decreed that all work should cease at noon on Saturday, and not be resumed until sunrise on Monday.

In the following century King Canute issued an order: "Let every Sunday be kept from Saturday's noon to Monday's dawn," and in 1303 a similar law was made in Scotland.

In those days the market-place joined the parish church, and after prayers each Saturday evening the people would go out and purchase their weekly store of provisions.

WILL SCIENCE MAKE MEN?

Ingredients That Form Body Are Being Discovered.

Is the day approaching when scientists will be able to make artificial men?

They have discovered the various substances which go to make up our bodies, but, so far, they have failed in their attempts to make human beings. Many investigations have been tried and some have claimed to have produced artificial life of a kind. The have declared that they have formed animals which have not only lives, and fed, but even multiplied.

In the second part of "Faust," Goethe's great play, the leading character undertakes to produce an artificial man, who is even brought on to the stage. But in real life such a feat remains to be accomplished.

Science has discovered that the body consists of a number of complicated chemical mixtures. The greater part of a man's weight is made up of water, of which there is from 90 lbs. to 170 lbs. The next most important ingredient is carbon, of which there is half the weight of the water in the body. Carbon is the basis of a number of the substances found in our frame, such as fats and albumen.

Other materials are ammonia, which supplies the nitrogen in our bodies; phosphorous, salt, and calcium carbonate, which builds up most of the bones. Fluorine is present to give hardness to the teeth and bones, and in the hair, skin, and nails are found sulphur and potassium nitrate.

Other substances exist only in very small quantities. Iron, which gives the red color to the blood, is the most important. Part of its function is to absorb the oxygen from the air into the body.

It seems strange that a deadly poison should have its place in our systems, but such is the case, for arsenic is another ingredient, though in only a tiny quantity. It is useful for its bracing effect on the body. Iodine, found in the thyroid gland, keeps the body in the condition of activity indicated by its temperature.

The remaining elements seem to have very little effect on the system, being little more than a mixture introduced with food. They are bromium traces, copper traces, and lead traces, aluminium, manganese, silicon, magnesium, and saltpetre.

A Novel Gift.

Lord Desborough has given evidence of his fine sportsmanship in a novel and practical manner. He has insured his life for $50,000 in favor of St. Dunstan's Institute for the Blind.

I am told that Lord Desborough consented to publicity being given to the matter on the suggestion of St. Dunstan's, so that possibly further benefactions may accrue to deserving charities through similar actions on the part of others.

As a matter of fact, a number of other people, I believe, have executed policies in favor of charities since hearing of Lord Desborough's generosity.

Wooden Barracks Doomed.

Spy Trailed American Reds

Francis Morrow, alias "K-97," enters the lists of fame as one of the most successful detectives of the day. It was he who wormed his way into the very heart of the Communist movement in the United States, and gathered the evidence on which William Z. Foster, and thirty-one others, were recently put on trial at St. Joseph, Michigan, on a charge of plotting to overthrow the American Government by force. The jury in the case disagreed and Foster and the others may not be tried again; at any rate, they regard the disagreement as virtually an acquittal, and probably the Government regards it as a reverse. But the ordinary reader of evidence would have little trouble in making up his mind that Foster and his associates believe that only by such methods as prevailed in Russia is the present Government to be overthrown. It may be that even an acquittal will have appreciably the same effect upon the Communist movement on this continent as a conviction, perhaps a more beneficial effect. Had there been a conviction, other enthusiasts would have sprung up to take the places of the imprisoned comrades. Now the comrades have to ask themselves whether they would run the risk a second time. The answer is likely to be in the negative.

They knew that Francis Morrow, an agent of the Department of Justice, was able to join their ranks and work his way up until he was one of the trusted few most closest to the secrets of the party. They also knew that other Government agents have worked as high, or even higher, although the Government did not find it necessary or advisable to produce them as witnesses. There was a secret meeting after Morrow had been revealed, and a correct report of it was produced by the prosecution, thus indicating that somebody even more highly placed than he was a Government agent. There are fears that one of the secret ten of the Central Executive Committee is a Federal detective, and it is well known that fears, even when they are unfounded, are quite as terrifying as those that have a solid basis. So that the Government movement is due, and that the plan for establishing an American Soviet has been once more postponed. Until a year or two ago these Communists met openly and advocated an overthrow of the Government by force. Prosecutions, raids and deportations drove the movement underground, where Morrow, who had posed as a radical Socialist, accompanied it. Camouflage was used by the American Reds forming a so-called Workers' Party, which should be within the law, but which would be secretly controlled by illegal Communist Party of America, in full affiliation with the Third International, and receiving instructions from Moscow.

Morrow got into the Communist Party and, by dint of violent sentiments and hard work, had himself elected an officer, and later, by still greater violence of utterance, had himself appointed a delegate to attend the annual convention of the secret Reds. The most extraordinary precautions were taken to frustrate any possible treachery on the part of delegates. Morrow, as a delegate from Philadelphia, was instructed to proceed with his two fellow-delegates to an address in Cleveland. There he was met by a Communist, who redirected him to Detroit by boat; thence by another, who despatched the party, swollen by other delegates, to Grand Rapids, and from Grand Rapids they were guided to Bridgman, a little village on the banks of Lake Michigan, where the convention was to be held. Once in the hotel at Bridgman, the delegates were guarded like prisoners. They were not permitted to write letters, to use the telephone, to speak with strangers. They had to be in bed at a certain hour, and only at a certain hour were they permitted to bathe in the lake. Despite all these precautions, Morrow was able to get out one message to headquarters, to the effect that the convention would be held somewhere near Bridgman.

All the delegates passed under assumed names, which deceived not only the several inspectors of hotel registers, but each other as well. Rose Pastor Stokes was one delegate, Foster was another. The proceedings were held in a clearing in the heart of the woods and continued at night. Stenographers were present, reports were made and adopted, and plans laid for the future. Suddenly one morning another secret service agent, after having searched for the place all day, stumbled upon it, pretended to be a tourist, asked for a drink of water and departed. He had been recognized by Foster, however, and it was decided to end the proceedings.

All the records were put in a couple of barrels and buried, a few whispered instructions given, and the delegates prepared for flight. Some of them got away, but the authorities swooped down in time to gather in sixteen. The barrels were dug up, and the prosecution began. It was only then that Comrade Morrow was revealed as a detective. It was shown that he had solved the Reds' ciphers, had copies of their correspondence, and had, in fact, almost as much knowledge of what they were doing and intended to do as Foster himself. But, lest he be considered too romantic a figure, it was also decided that he worked for $5 a day.

HELP FOR YOUNG WOMEN

Mrs. Holmberg Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her

Viking, Alta.—"From the time I was 15 years old I would get such sick feelings in the lower part of my abdomen, followed by cramps and voluntary. This kept me from my work (I help my parents on the farm) as I usually had to go to bed for the rest of the day. Oratimes I would have to walk the floor. I suffered in this way until a friend induced me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have had very satisfactory results so far and am recommending the Vegetable Compound to my friends. I surely am glad I tried it for I feel like a different person now that I don't have these troubles."—Mrs. Ontzia Holmmann, Box 88, Viking, Alta.

Letters like this establish the merits of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. They tell of the relief from such pains and ailments after taking it.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and today holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills in this country, and thousands of voluntary testimonials prove this fact.

If you doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Cobourg, Ontario, for Mrs. Pinkham's private text-book and learn more about it. C

What Did You Do with That Match?

The suffering and loss caused by forest fires are common knowledge and, yet, carelessness with fire in the forest continues. These forest fires are practically all preventable.

Save Ontario's Forests

They're Yours

Every individual who steps inside the woods should remember he is in the midst of highly inflammable property, for the upper layer of ground in the forest consists of partially rotted wood, which will burn. Lack of consideration for this gave rise to the strenuous situation in Ontario the last week of May and the anxiety for days in some settlements.

Thoughtlessness or bad judgment or carelessness cause practically all forest fires. Your co-operation, as a citizen, is needed to prevent these fires by taking the same care in the woods as in your own home.

Where World's Record Speckled Trout was Taken

FOR a distance of 880 miles, between Sudbury, the junction of the two main lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Manitoba boundary, there are only twelve points with a population of over 200. This means that for 880 miles there are only twelve points at which civilization has to any extent encroached upon what is one of the last few remaining accessible wilderness regions of the North American continent. From the French River, north of the Georgian Bay and Lakes Huron and Superior to west of Kenora, a tract of land 880 miles long and of unknown depth is practically unexplored, and yet this part of Northern Ontario is one of the most richly endowed sections of Canada in natural beauty. Sylvan lakes, streams and larger waterways form a network through the country and almost incredible stories are told of the size and quantity of fish, particularly the speckled trout to be found there. It is a well known haunt of big game.

That this country is sparsely populated is alone responsible for the fact that it is not known to more tourists and sportsmen. Each year hundreds more are absorbed by the country, but the lack of accommodation has kept many more hundreds away. Three of the most fascinating districts of this glorious tract will therefore be rendered more attractive than ever by the erection this summer of comfortable bungalow camps at French River, Nipigon River and Kenora (Lake of the Woods). These camps will be similar to those which have proved so successful along the line of the Canadian Pacific in the Canadian Rockies. A well built central club house, where meals will be served and facilities provided for social diversions, will be surrounded by cosy little bungalows, designed for one, two or four persons, equipped simply but comfortably with a camp bed and a few other accessories. The simple construction and cost of maintenance will enable the management to offer much lower rates than are possible in the standard hotels.

The French River bungalow camp is located on an elevation which commands a magnificent view of the main channel of the French, within 200 yards of the railway station. The scenery is characteristic of the Georgian Bay region, rocky islands, deep waterways, and dense pine forests in which all kinds of game abound.

The Nipigon is called the home of red and speckled trout, and with some truth, for it is undoubtedly the most prolific breeding place for these sporty fish in the world. The world's record speckled trout came from there in 1915 when Dr. J. W. Cook, of Fort William, Ont., took one out weighing 14½ pounds and measuring 31½ inches from head to tail and 11¼ inches across. What need to say more, unless it be that the scenery is equal to any seen at the French River or Lake of the Woods.
